COLORADO FALL COLORS THROUGH THE EYES OF BETTY ARNDT

Hello from the Rocky Mountains, where fall colors are bursting in bright yellows and gold against the backdrop of pine trees, rolling foothills and craggy mountain peaks.

From an artists perspective, it's hard not to be inspired by the changing color pallet. This is a great time to get outside with friends, easels and paints...and put our visions to canvas.

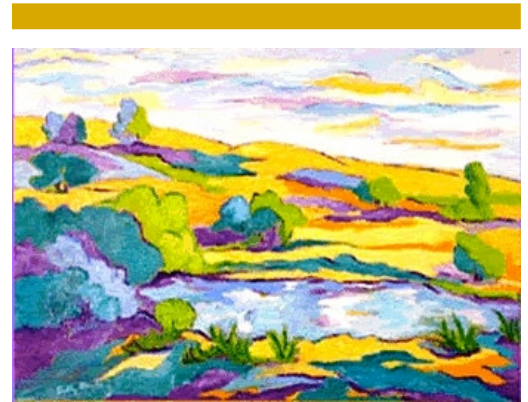

My vision is clearly not a literal interpretation of the landscape. My technique involves creating shapes not only with lines, but with colors—a technique that has evolved over time and place. I had a love of drawing since a very young age, and began painting in southern California while studying with local artists and also at the Laguna Beach School of Art and Design. My style portrayed realistic views of the ocean and rocky coastline.

Moving to the Midwest and studying with the innovative Martha Hayden allowed me to free my style and interpret the Midwest landscape in a new way.

Finally, moving to Colorado inspired me to experiment with color even further. As the sun moves and with each passing cloud, the Rocky Mountains change their color from green to gold to brown to misty blues and purples.

I am now experimenting by using watercolors with bright, striking results. View my latest works at the events listed in this newsletter.
